“The work and worry that fell to my lot through the practical interest I took in organ-building made me wish that I had never troubled myself about it, but if I did not give it up, the reason is that the struggle for the good organ is to me a part of the struggle for the truth.”

Albert Schweitzer

“God...is manifest in the relationship which makes things beautiful. We apprehend Him in the alternate voids and fullnesses of a cathedral; in the spaces that separate the salient features of a picture; in the living geometry of a flower, a seashell, an animal; in the pauses and intervals between the notes of music, in their differences of tone and sonority; and finally, on the plane of conduct, in the love and gentleness, the confidence and humility, which give beauty to the relationships between human beings.”

Aldous Huxley

“...the pursuit of beauty and spiritual practice go hand in hand.”

Thomas Moore
