SCHOOL ATHLETICS

Duluth News-Tribune.

One of the things not regularly in the curriculum of American schools and colleges, to which the young men attending give great attention, is athletics. It is the same thing in the schools of the English-speaking peoples. It is certain that proper exercise and a certain degree of athletic training is essential to the rapid and the young men of the country are not only following their natural physical impulses, in taking part in physical exercises and athletic sports, but, even in moderation, they are obeying a salutary law.

Are students recognized this fact when they declared "A sane mind is in a sound body." How can the mind be clear and well balanced when the body is lurking in that buoyancy which comes from a lack of proper food and exercises? All educators now recognize the necessity of athletics, their difficulty being to confine attention to them within due bounds so that they will not become a factor in the intellectual business of the school.
