NOTES

The organ was installed in a chamber in the front, left corner of the sanctuary. Two banks of expression shutters allowed for tonal egress into the sanctuary at the front, and across a hallway into a left-side choir gallery where the console was placed. The expression shutters were removed and replaced at least twice at the changing whims of organists. And the console was pivoted once but remained essentially in fixed position, left.

The chimes were added after the original installation, and hang from the peak of the ceiling at the rear of the sanctuary. They were left behind when the organ was removed.

The organ was removed for St. Andrew's by Jim Stettner and was for sale. But it is believed to have ultimately been taken in-trade by Bond Pipe Organs of Portland, Oregon when the new tracker was installed in 2001. Its subsequent disposition is unknown.
